The university-industry interactions have been perceived by academics and governments as one of the key drivers for social and economic development of nations. In Brazil, these interactions are still a recent phenomenon, with no more. The university-industry interactions have been perceived by academics and governments as one of the key drivers for social and economic development of nations.